1. Last April in Kabul, an American who introduced himself as an officer of the USA Embassy there, walked into the apartment of Soviet specialist Mir-Movsumov.

Using the so-called "recruiting letter" from a turkish businessman known to Mir-Movsumov the American persistently tried to make the Soviet specialist work for the CIA. The   American threatened him repeatedly and then appointed a date and place for their meeting to discuss further details of Mir-Movsumov's "cooperation" with the CIA.

During their meeting in one of Kabul restaurants the American was detained by the local police and identified as Mr.Lingan of the US Embassy in Tehran. Along with Lingan was detained Mr.Lessard, political officer of the US   Embassy in Kabul, known to work for the same Intelligence Agency.

2. In June of 1973 in Bonn, Soviet diplomat Ossipov was visiting iranian diplomat Mr.Gahzi when four men bursted into apartment. One of them introduced himself as Mr.Lange, Chief of American intelligence service in Germany. He started to threaten and blackmail Ossipov, trying to recruit him to work for the CIA.

After Ossipov refused, Lange and his men physically assaulted the Soviet diplomat and kept him in the apartment for several hours until he managed to break away.

3. Not long ago in New York, N.Y., Soviet employee of the Amtorg Allaverdov was suddenly invited to one of Alexander's department stores to be interviewed on an incident taken place with his wife last December. Allaverdov was met there by a certain Mr.Grimsley who introduced himself as a department store's employee, but later said that he was working for the US Government.
Mr. Grimsley had the brazenness to demand from Allaverdov an information on the delegation of the USSR Ministry of oil industry, which was visiting this country that time.
